

hoopla. They are not all forced to the same pattern. Such programs are in effect now. These are unheralded training centers, strategically placed, controlled directly by experts who know their jobs, know what personnel are needed, and know what they need to know. They are specific and to the point. The training centers get results in their own ways, independently. The words schools, students, professors no longer apply. Fields such as medicine, agriculture, business, and others deserve their independence. Likewise the broadening process of education deserves to be liberated from the stresses and concepts of monetary values, relevance, jobs. The overlaps, the links between education and training, occur in the minds of Johnny and Jane.

It was, I think, the Reader's Digest in early days that told of a small boy puzzled at the discovery that his color blind chum could not tell red from green. He asked his mother about it. She replied: "You see, Johnny, the world looks different to Harry from the way it looks to you." The boy put the question that the sages cannot and should not try to answer: "Which way is it, Mom, the way he sees it or the way I see it?"
